A Sale For Safety!

How do you sell safety? Take it right to the door -- in this case right to the door of the TIMES-VIRGINIAN where Jaycee Danny Simpson (left) delivered three safety flares to publisher W. Lloyd Vaughan (right). Everyone has a chance to buy the J-C Safety Flares, safeguard automobiles and loved ones in case of accident. See the J-C Safety Flare display and sale on Saturday at Kings, Wilburs, Appox Auto Parts and Fidelity National Bank.

Ronnie Spiggle or Toby Inge or any member of the two organizations will accept funds for the special bank account set up for the purpose. Others who care to, may mail their donations directly to the Jaycees at Box 265 or make a deposit to Fidelity National Bank, Appomattox.

By-Pass Opens At Pamplin

As construction crews look on, Maryjane and Hal Smith hop on the auto hood to be the first Pamplin travelers through the Pamplin City by-pass Monday afternoon. Their parents are Mr. and Mrs. Earl J. Smith. Driver of the car: Mrs. Smith's mother, Mrs. Ruby Clark. The $2 million dollar by-pass on Route 460 adds another nearly nine miles of divided highway to the Roanoke to Richmond route, cuts about a mile from the total mileage and reduces the two-lane mileage that is not now completed or under construction to less than 30 miles on the 165-mile route. Contractor is W. W. Varsing, of Crewe. Roadside construction on the project will be going on into October and some speed restrictions will be effect where forces are still working on roadsides.

Economy UP--Farm Population Down In Latest Survey Of Appomattox

Population is up -- family income has increased and definite changes in urban - farm living are evident upon examination of the "Economic Data Summary" for Appomattox County, periodic publication of the Division of State Planning and Community Affairs. In addition to this 15 page summary, there are supplementary figures available through the extension office in two booklets on population characteristics published in July and August of this year plus those on school related matters from the VEA Research Service.

County leaders, businessmen and others receiving copies of the "Economic Data Summary" for Appomattox County from the Division of State Planning and Community Affairs, may wish to update the information contained in it. Copies of the 15 page summary are available at VPI Cooperative Extension Office.

The booklet covers such subjects as population, income, number of farm families, labor resources, major industries, government, local taxes, transportation, water and sewage, treatment, electricity and natural gas, community facilities, natural resources and public lands.

Appomattox County has a population of 10,131 (1958 estimate by Bureau of Population and Economic Research, U. Va.) a 10.7 percent change from the 1960 Census figure of 9,148. Total Virginia population, as of July 1, 1968, was 4,692,675.

Median family income (1959) was listed as $3,495 in the Data summary, but extension agent J. A. Smith puts the more encouraging figure of $4,300 as of 1968. School teachers salaries show a decided jump in two decades of progress. Average annual salary in Appomattox 1949-1950 was $1,764. Now the minimum for a teacher with a bachelor's degree is $6,000, increasing to $7,920 maximum with increment of $720 for teachers holding a master's degree.

Current real estate tax structure is $3.00 per $100 evaluation based on 30% of true value. Farm machinery is taxed at $2.00 per $100 evaluation with $3.00 on other machinery used in business and industry. Appomattox levies no personal property tax on household furniture and fixtures, but there is a personal property tax on automobiles.

The many smaller farms of the county are still being "farmed" to a degree, but people actively engaged in full-time farming have declined from 54.3% of the population in 1950 to 36.5% in 1960, and according to J. A. Smith, the figures continue to decline.

Levels of Living

The level of living in Appomattox County has been compared with 396 other counties from Virginia and West Va., north to Maine. Nassau County, N.Y. was given highest rank according to 12 different characteristics with Accomack County, Virginia ranking lowest.

This is part of a correlated study, based on 1960 census figures and others completed by George T. Blume, extension specialist, Sociology, in August 1969 ranks all 397 counties throughout the 13 Northeastern United States and District of Columbia, according to each of 12 factors. The 12 factors include "in-migration", a measure of socio-economic attraction; years of formal education including 4 or more years at college (U.S. as whole, 7.7 percent); employment percentage in technical skills; unemployment, housing (U.S. as whole has 81.2% of its people adequately housed); telephones; number voting; medical services; hygiene standards; stable family life (no. of divorces and annulments). Fairfax county has a rating of 83 compared with Appomattox at 25.

The majority of the 98 counties within the state fell within the lower 1/5 of all 397 counties. A comparison of total points, as examples, show Appomattox with a rating of 25, Buckingham, 15; Nelson, 36; Cumberland, 23; Amherst, 36; Campbell, 50; and Bedford, 31.

Hear About Narcotics

"Narcotics, A National Problem" will be discussed by R. David Jones, Virginia State Police, tonight at Mabe's during the Appomattox Lions Club meeting. (6:45 p.m.)

Appomattox Lions have given $110 for Flood Relief in Nelson County, part of an expected $10,000 raised in this Lions' District.

Will Tonight Be Your Night?

This Saturday, Sept. 27, 1969, the Appomattox County Jaycees will conduct their "Highway Safety Flare Project" in four locations in Appomattox. Your local Jaycees will be selling flares at King's Market, Wilbun's Market, Appomattox Auto Parts and The Fidelity National Bank in downtown Appomattox. These "safety flares" will be sold for $1.25 per pack. Each pack consists of three, fifteen minute flares and a water-proof plastic carrying bag.

Congress will probably pass a bill in the very near future requiring all new automobiles to be equipped with safety flares as standard equipment.

The Appomattox County Jaycees urge you to purchase your "safety flares" now. These flares have saved many lives at the scenes of accidents. They are to be used in case of car trouble, flat tires or auto accidents. Being a driver, you never know when you may need these safety flares. Will tonight be your night to need "safety flares"?

All proceeds to be used to purchase oxygen inhalators for the Appomattox Rescue Squad.

A new 92 foot crane swings roof trusses into position as progress continues on Fidelity National Bank's new building in Hillcrest, Appomattox. The two-story Williamsburg design structure will be a full service bank, with drive-in facility, walk-in teller service, conference and lending areas and parking for more than 30 cars. A model community room is planned to seat approximately 25 persons and will be available to local civic groups. Cost of the new facility: about $132,000. Floyd L. Eezleston. Fidelity Vice-president is manager of the bank's Appomattox office. C&S Construction Products, Lynchburg, furnished the crane with Structural Decks, Inc. of Baltimore using the crane early this week to install slab roofing.

New Bank On The Way

Workmen have been playing an adult game of "sliding board" walking up to the Fidelity Bank rooftop with cat-like steps on each narrow truss -- then sliding down for more tools and supplies as the need arises. From the camera's point of view, the view UP THERE must be bright and breezy, but safety first, for amateurs, dictates that the camera stay on ground with more expert climbers furnishing a different point of view!
